

Excerpt from The Gleaner, Vol. 5: June, 1905 There is perhaps nothing that appeals to man more than a neat, comfortable dwelling, set off by trees, shrubs andowering plants in harmony with its surroundings. It has been said that the hope of America, is the homes of America; whatever adorns ones home ennobles his domestic life, strengthens his love for country, and nurtures the better elements of nature in him who is thrown in contact with such improvements. To promote a love for growing plants by cultivation and study, develops in human kind a love for the beautiful in nature, art, and character. It is a known fact that the love of nature sharpens the senses and quickens all the intellectual faculties. It is largely because of rambles through woods and exercise in small gardens, that children become healthy and aged people present the bloom and vigor of youth in later years. A home garden is a delight to everyone, even the passer-by may observe and feel inspired by the wonderful works of nature. The very atmosphere about such place seems to be permeated with animation, and healthfulness, and gives an impression of repose so that one feels as though life is other than a mere drudge. The outward embellishment of a home, portrays to the passing person some idea as to the home-life of the family. A neat, well kept garden or lawn suggests industry and an appreciation of the works of nature. On the other hand, barren or unkempt grounds, clearly illustrate the lack of interest in the welfare of ourselves and of those about us.
